By the time all was said and done, the WSGA had 282 golfers trying to play in its state match-play championship and only 64 ever got to play a match (or 23 percent). Of course, under the previous single-elimination format, 32 golfers were sent home after one match, 16 more after a second and so on.

The most common injuries affecting both amateur and professional male golfers are to the lower back (1,7,8). Injuries to this site, as well as to other com-monly injured sites such as the wrist, elbow, and shoulder, have mainly been attributed, in both groups of golfers, to excessive repetition of the swing during play and practice (1,2,7,8).
